HEALTHCARE

Within the healthcare industry there are many innovative, specialist products that are cost effective and can increase efficiencies within your organisation. Within this range you will find ideal solutions, which cater for effective, germ-free cleaning. Reduce the build-up of bacteria by using the concentrated surface sanitiser, catering sanitiser, kitchen cleaner or washroom sanitiser, which all meet the requirements of BSEN 1276. This British Standard measures the effectiveness against a range of bacteria, including E. coli and MRSA. Making them essential for use in hospitals, surgeries and nursing homes.

Implementing the colour code system within the healthcare sector is vitally important, as people's immune systems are weak and susceptible to infection. It prevents materials and equipment being used in multiple areas, which reduces the risk of cross infection. Please see page 19 for further information on using colour-coding equipment.

COLOUR-CODING

Using colour-coding for hygiene

Colour-coding is based on the idea of designating particular cleaning products and processes to consistent colour schemes. Its purpose is to segregate equipment and procedures in order to prevent cross contamination in the home and workplace.

Red

High risk sanitary areas such as toilets, urinals and washroom floors

Blue

Low risk general area such as desk tops, window ledges, dusting & polishing

Green

Catering departments, food processing, food service & bar areas

Yellow

Washbasins & surfaces including tiled walls, mirrors, glass & metal

Following the colour-coding system successfully, will help protect the safety and well-being of your employees.

1. Make sure you educate and train your employees and cleaning staff
2. Monitor the colour-coding system on an ongoing basis, to ensure it remains effective
3. Ensure cleaning starts in the least contaminated areas first and leave washrooms until last
4. Follow colour-coding across all materials and equipment, to include cloths, buckets, mops, brushes, dustpans & dusters

The colour-coding system is spread across a selection of products, including cloths, mops, buckets, brushes and dusters. A full range is available via www.officerange.com
